

WOKING, who have the distinction of being the last Rothmans Isthmian League team to win at Loakes Park, visit Wycombe Wanderers again tonight (Tuesday) with revenge in mind after their 4-0 defeat by the Blues last month.

That last defeat at Loakes Park was on November 21, 1972, when Wycombe went down 2-1. Since then, the Blues have played 44 league matches, won 36, and drawn eight, scoring 107 goals and conceding a mere 32 — a remarkable record by any standards.

At first glance it looks unlikely that Woking have the skills to bring that record to an end. Having already lost 4-0 at Kingfield, they have struggled in the lower regions of Division One this season. On Saturday, however, they recorded their first £40 bonus with a 4-1 triumph over Bromley with newcomer Steve Cosham scoring one and making two of the goals.

Woking are looking to Cosham, who signed on with Martin Rosser from Horsham recently, to maintain their improvement. Since their arrival, the team has been changed considerably with Roger Steer and Ray Poole coming into the side. John Grondona, a veteran striker who is the club's top goalscorer, cannot find a place in the team at present while former Wanderer Trevor Waughman left a month ago.

Wanderers have three injury worries in Keith Searle, Howard Kennedy and Paul Birdseye. All three received ankle injuries in the 5-1 victory over Leytonstone on Saturday. Dylan Evans, Terry Reardon and Paul Griffiths are the ready-made replacements should the players not recover in time.
